INTRODUCTION

Background and Motivation

The 12th revised edition of the Beauty Without Cruelty Investment Guide has been created at the request of prospective investors who come from a religious, vegetarian background, for a source of information about the nature of businesses carried out by various companies. Many such people (BWC members and others) are very concerned about what ingredients the company's product contains or what the process is of making that product. The source of their concern is their deep attachment for the principle of ahinsa preached by their religion, or because they have reverence for life, that they do not wish to partake of “blood money”.

Unfortunately, the nature of many businesses violates this principle by involving infliction of gross cruelty on animals to obtain from their bodies materials of commercial value. Many sections of the Indian community do not indulge in or support such occupations. They even refuse to share in the profits of such companies since to them it represents ill-gotten wealth. It is for such people that information for this guide is painstakingly researched. Specifically, those interested in knowing whether there are animal ingredients in an article and whether the process of manufacturing the article involves inflicting pain upon any animal should find this guide useful.

Purpose of this Guide

The Beauty Without Cruelty Investment Guide is meant to help the investor identify companies whose businesses do not necessitate the conscious and willful infliction of physical harm, injury, slavery, or death upon any member of the animal kingdom down to the level of insects. Microbial life and plant life is not included. Human life was included in earlier editions with suppliers of defence equipment being down-rated. Many felt it was in the interest of India's self-defence, so the suppliers should not be penalized.

In addition to this major change, after considerable thought and discussion, in 2015 Beauty Without Cruelty felt it necessary to make a few other changes in the criteria on the basis of which the companies have been rated. Therefore please read this introduction carefully.

The problems in classifying companies come under two headings:

1. Companies whose businesses involve inflicting cruelty upon animals although their names or reputation do not suggest so; and
2. Companies whose businesses involve no cruelty to animals although their names suggest otherwise.

Beauty Without Cruelty urges the reader not to form opinions about companies without informing himself/herself completely about them first. In the first case, a person may end up supporting a cruel activity, and in the second, he/she may be proscribing a good business by having preconceived notions about it.

Examples of the second category of companies include manufacturers of synthetic leather goods, furs, or substitutes to meat. Beauty Without Cruelty would like to whole-heartedly encourage such businesses. We urge the reader to invest in these companies (they may not fall under BSE500 and be covered in this guide) and make them successful so that ethical substitutes become available commercially. They may be as profitable to invest in as their proscribed competitors, so investors need not be worried about the return on their investments.

Such companies are few and far between, however. The names of most companies usually correctly reveal the nature of their businesses. There is no ambiguity about what their product contains or what the process might be of making it. Thus, the fact that a company called 'Unpopular Hatcheries' or 'Paltry Poultry Farms' is involved in breeding and killing chicken (or other fowl) is evident from its name. Similarly it is clear that 'Genuine Leather Goods' deals in the product of killed animals. It is interesting to note here that people still believe in the myth that leather comes from the hide of animals that have died a natural death. Such is not the case, and Beauty Without Cruelty rejects as ethically unacceptable all products of animal origin, regardless of the circumstances of the animal's death. This is based on the realistic assumption that no company that is surviving in the competitive, mass-manufacture market of today, would rely on the natural death of animals for their raw material; a visit to the nearest slaughterhouse would be far cheaper and more fruitful for them.

Other than such companies, which produce or market a direct product of animals' suffering, the common man is faced with problems when considering other companies. The problems lie in the following classes:

1. Companies which, besides their main product or line of products, are involved in another product for which they are not well known. This is usually the result of diversification. For example, a power producing company's associate may be manufacturing bone china. Or, a nylon yarn manufacturer may be involved in producing fishnet twines.
2. Products not commonly associated with animals, like lubricants and greases which contain animal ingredients such as tallow, fatty and stearic acid.
3. Products containing 'hidden' animal ingredients. Examples: soaps and toothpastes. Soap can contain animal fats, which come directly from the slaughterhouse. Likewise, toothpastes can contain bone material. Most black paints are made from bone black, shellac is extensively utilized, and fish oils are very important to the paint industry. (Photographic film containing gelatine has been deleted since films are now made digitally and beamed to cinema halls.)
4. Processes that use animal ingredients or equipment containing animal products. For example, the process of wine or beer clarification may involve the use of isinglass obtained from swim bladders of fish.

5. Companies which manufacture equipment or raw materials for others whose businesses involve exploiting or killing animals. Examples: The supplier of animal feeds (the feed itself may be made from soy beans) to a poultry or aqua industry. The supplier of bulk drugs to a pharmaceutical company. And, the supplier of chemicals, auxiliaries and dyes used for processing leather to manufacturers of leather goods.

Contents of this Guide

The Beauty Without Cruelty Investment Guide contains the January 2017 BSE500 companies and the industry heads under which they are listed on BSE. The list is arranged alphabetically. The companies are classified under four categories: green, orange, grey and red to help the investor decide whether to invest in the company or not. The colours carry their commonly understood meaning in this context also:

A company is marked green if it does not cause cruelty to any animals, and BWC gives the green signal, so to speak, to anyone wishing to invest in it.

Any company marked orange may or may not itself be involved in animal exploitation so should be considered with caution and personal judgment.

Companies marked grey are suppliers of raw materials to other companies and are directly supporting animal exploitation businesses although there may be no animal exploitation involved in their own products.

Companies marked red should not be invested in as they are known to cause cruelty to and death of animals.

Reasons for the assignment of companies to the orange, grey and red categories are given alongside their names. The reasons for rejection usually follow one of the 'problems' stated above. Certain companies marked green also carry relevant comments. For example, if a finance company is marked green instead of orange, the reason that it is housing finance, is stated alongside.

The classification is based upon, and therefore limited by, the best knowledge available to us. Although many experts have been contacted to obtain the required information, our research into the ingredients of products and the details of manufacturing the product continues on an ongoing basis. Where the details of a company are not completely available, we have rated it red if there is strong reason to suspect that its product is not free of cruelty. This may happen either because of the fact that the product is known generically to satisfy our criteria for disqualification, or because of information gathered about the company from non-official, though reliable, sources. For example, certain models of vehicles have cow hide (Italian leather) upholstery – such automobile manufacturers have been rated red even though the majority of vehicles made by them may be having non-leather upholstery. Besides, if upon request from customers, the company distributors obtain and supply genuine leather accessories like covers for seats and steering wheels, it is stated for consideration alongside the green rating assigned to the manufacturer.

When a company that we have marked red, grey or orange satisfies us that they do not cause harm to any animals, BWC would be happy to move them to the green category as has happened in past editions of the Beauty Without Cruelty Investment Guide.

The following list gives the names and descriptions of some substances and processes that have caused companies to be disqualified from being rated green. The reasons for their proscription are given alongside.

Limitations

Practical reality and the difficulty of being a 100% consistent in application of principles have prevented Beauty Without Cruelty from issuing a categorical red rating in a few cases where a blind application of our criteria would have recommended that rating. Such cases are put in the grey or orange category, and are left for the reader to draw conclusions.

Companies have been rated green if no known alternative to that product or process exists and that product is indispensable to our lives in today's context. Examples are steel and plastic. The literature describes the process of manufacturing steel as involving the use of animal fat at some stage, as also the use of animal fat and bone black in plastics. This would disqualify steel and plastic manufacturing companies from inclusion in the green category. However, they have been retained there because of the indispensability and ubiquity of steel and plastic in today's era.

Companies have been also rated green if they are secondary links in a chain of animal products. This generally includes all companies that provide a product or service using products in which or in whose manufacturing process animal cruelty has not featured, unless they are direct suppliers of raw materials to companies that are involved in actual killing or exploitation. Some examples: A cement manufacturer and a construction company that builds a hotel are both marked green, but an IT company that services a hotel, is marked orange; whereas the hotel that sells non-vegetarian food has been rated red. A company that researches and rates listed companies is marked green even though many companies covered by them could be involved in animal exploitation and death and be marked red.

The animal feed supplier is marked grey whereas the poultry farm or shrimp processor itself is rated red. The bulk drug supplier is also marked grey, where as the pharmaceutical company utilizing the bulk drug for its products, is marked red. The reverse also applies, like hospitals that utilize pharmaceuticals are marked orange, but pharmaceutical companies are rated red.

Generalizations have been applied which may turn out to be wrong in individual instances. For example, all pharmaceutical industries have been labeled red, because of the common fact that allopathy drugs are required by law to be tested on animals before they can be marketed. Moreover animal ingredients are utilized by them for almost all their products. Individual companies have not been approached to check whether their products are tested on animals or not – it is assumed they do. Similarly, all five-star hotels have been labeled red because there is no known five-star hotel group that does not have a restaurant serving non-vegetarian food. And all companies manufacturing paints, etc. have been marked red due to their extensive use of animal ingredients.

Subjective seriousness of offence: an example is the dairy industry. The dairy industry survives on depriving the offspring of cattle of their milk and death by starvation of the male calf. The decision on the seriousness of this crime is left up to the investor, and the dairy industry and its products categorized in the orange category. Equipment, machinery and raw material suppliers to dairies (wineries and breweries) have also been rated orange.

Likewise, packaging, refrigeration, kitchen and other, equipment to assist or for storage, as well as information and solution providers to pharmaceutical, paint, pesticide, fertilizer and non-vegetarian industries, have also been marked orange because these goods and services supplied by the companies are not exclusively for these industries. However, if specially made for the industries, they are marked grey. For example, a cold chain that transports poultry.

Certain industries might or might not be always utilizing animal products such as for the manufacture of art/coated paper. Also the production of tyres may or may not involve bone black and animal fat during manufacture. Another such product is textiles – the fibre used for the fabric could be animal derived like silk (red category) or wool (orange category), but even if cotton or nylon, the manufacturing process could involve ingredients like animal fat added for sizing, or pancreatic enzyme used for de-sizing. Such companies have been rated orange.

Banks, finance and financial service companies have been marked orange as they could invest in trades or give loans for sectors unacceptable to Beauty Without Cruelty. However a few finance companies which are giving loans exclusively for housing and vehicles have been placed in the green category.

2014 onwards it is mandatory for companies to spend at least 2% of their net profits on CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility) and declare the activities undertaken on their websites. Many companies have opted for rural upliftment involving animal husbandry, dairy, goat and poultry farming. However, BWC has not taken the companies' CSR activities into consideration when rating them for this guide. (If we had, a small percentage of companies would have been marked green.)

Any company supplying raw material to another company involved directly in (i.e., whose main purpose is) killing animals is marked grey. Therefore companies that make poultry/dairy/aqua feed, fishing nets, leather chemicals, bulk drugs, etc. are all marked grey, whereas the company that is using such products (e.g., the poultry company, the leather goods trader, the pharmaceutical company, etc.) are marked red. However, the companies supplying electricity, for example, to the poultry industry have not been penalized, owing to the difficulty of determining the complicity of these companies in the businesses objected to. Companies into logistics and other businesses where customers are not all from the red category are marked orange.

In the case of the activities of companies falling in more than one category, they have been placed in the red, grey or orange category (in that order) depending of which categories apply.

Mutual Funds would fall into the orange (more likely red) category although they have not been covered in our Beauty Without Cruelty Investment Guide. It should be noted that most sector related funds do not stick to their chosen mandate for investment which in itself could be worded cleverly by using the words "investing predominantly" in companies of the particular sector. In addition to this, a disclaimer in their offer document could clearly state that there is no assurance that the investment objective of the scheme will be carried out. And last but not least, due to wide diversification, companies they invest in for the sectorial mutual fund could easily get linked directly or indirectly to some other sector.

Bonds are no different to Mutual Funds, for example, a housing corporation which issued government tax-free bonds, stated among its non-performing assets a prominent hospitality venture which had not returned their loan of over ₹100 crore.

Conclusion

Beauty Without Cruelty believes that ones investments can easily reflect strict ethical standards; for example, one need not invest in a company manufacturing lubricants or tyres, even though one may use a vehicle which is a necessity. On the other hand, one does not need to invest in a company manufacturing leather car upholstery or even purchase a car that has it.

Since our guide has not covered each and every company listed on the Stock Exchanges in India, please feel free to inquire with us about particular stocks in your portfolio which we have not listed, or if you are considering purchase of any new ones. Beauty Without Cruelty will be happy to research the activities of such companies and promise to get back to you as soon as possible.

It is hoped that the Beauty Without Cruelty Investment Guide provides the reader information about the nature of businesses of various companies relating to their exploitation of animals. In preparing this list, Beauty Without Cruelty has tried to be as objective as possible in the application of its criteria, but in an exercise like this it is impossible to be a 100% consistent and arrive at a practical, viable conclusion.

Therefore, the final choice is left to the reader, since it is his/her conscience that must agree with his/her decision.

Any errors in spelling the names of companies are regretted.
